Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow :

My grandfather had served many years in the Indian Forest Service, and it was natural that he should know and like trees. On his retirement he built a bungalow on the outskirts of the town of Dehra Dun planting trees all round. In the fertile Doon valley, the plants grew tall and strong.

My grandmother did not mind trees, but preferred growing flowers and was constantly ordering seeds. Grandfather helped her with gardening, not because he really liked flower gardens, but he liked watching butterflies and there was only one way to attract butterflies and that was to grow flowers for them.

My grandfather was not content with growing trees in our compound. During rains he would walk into the jungle armed with cuttings and saplings, which he would plant in the forest.
