Test-II: English Language

Directions (Q. 41-50): Read the passage carefully and answer the questions given below it. Certain words/phrases are given in bold to help you locate them while answering some of the questions.

It is evident now that the only way to revive the Indian economy from its long slumber is to kickstart infrastructure projects. While various policy initiatives from the Government hold the key to new up stalled projects and revive the capex cycle, infrastructure spending is vital. Infrastructure Debt Funds (IDFs), which were conceived to provide an additional funding route for such projects, appear to be well on track, tapping into pools of private capital.

Given that the Government can cough up about half the amount needed to fund long-term infrastructure projects, and the slowdown in the economy has further crimped the flow of government funds, more participation from the private sector is imperative to sustain long-term infrastructure development.

Banks, particularly public sector banks, have been at the forefront, providing the necessary funding and taking on risks associated with these long-gestation projects. But banks' increasing exposure to the infrastructure sector has led to asset liability mismatches in their balance sheet and increased their stockpile of stressed assets.

IDFs will not only free up banks' balance sheets to take on fresh lending but also provide borrowers a low-cost financing option. This, along with infrastructure bonds that banks are now allowed to issue, should see greater participation from the private sector.

The Finance Minister in his Budget speech for the year 2011-12, announced the setting up of IDFs, and the RBI subsequently issued guidelines in September 2011 for setting these up.

IDFs are investment vehicles which can be sponsored by commercial banks and non-banking financial companies (NBFCs) in India. Domestic or foreign institutional investors, especially insurance and pension funds, can invest through units and bonds issued by the IDFs.

An IDF can be set up either as a trust or as a company. A trust-based IDF is a mutual fund that is regulated by market regulator SEBI, and issues units to the investors. Under the company-based format, the IDF is an NBFC that issues bonds to investors. The IDF-NBFC is regulated by the RBI.

So far, three infra debt funds have been set up through the NBFC route and one through the MF route. For now, IDF-NBFC appears to be a preferred route for raising funds. The advantages of this route lie in the distinction between the two different formats.

There are three notable distinctions. One is the scope of financing. IDF-NBFCs are allowed to invest only in infrastructure projects which are created through the Public Private Partnership (PPP) route and have successfully completed one year of commercial production.

Hence these debt funds can finance projects under NHAI, ports, airports and metro rail. As they lend only to operational projects, they do not carry any construction risk.

41. Why does the author assert that more participation from the private sector is necessary to sustain long-term infrastructure development?
 1) Because the government doesn't find to start long-term infrastructure projects.
 2) Because the government can sanction only half the amount required for long-term infrastructure projects.
