A sportswoman who has made India proud with her glorious achievements, Mary Kom is the only Indian woman boxer who managed to qualify for the 2012 Summer Olympics where she also won a Bronze Medal. Mary was born in Kangatheh, Manipur and was the eldest of four siblings. Named as Mangte Chungneijang at birth, she was called Mary as she entered the world of professional sports as it was easier to pronounce.

Born into a poor family she began helping her parents by working in the fields while still very young. As a school girl she used to play a variety of sports – hockey, football, and athletics – but surprisingly not boxing ! When the Manipuri boxer Dingko Singh won a gold at the Asian Games in 1998, Mary was inspired to take up boxing. But taking up a sport considered “masculine” by social standards was no easy task for the young tribal girl. However, Mary was not someone to be discouraged, and travelled to Imphal to train in athletics. She was passionate about the sport and was a quick learner; she would often practice till late in the night even after the others had left. Today her success is for all to see and she now teaches boxing to underprivileged youngsters for free.

Mary Kom was decorated with the Padma Shri, India's fourth highest civilian honour in 2010, and the Padma Bhushan in 2013, for her wonderful achievements in the field of sports. If we wish to master meditation we can follow what saints do. They meditate long hours and work hard to practise meditation. They do not sit for a few minutes, get up and eat something, sit for a few more minutes, and then watch television for three hours, then sit again, and then get up and engage in more distractions.

They keep themselves seated until they achieve their goal. If we follow their dedication and zeal to their meditation we too will attain the spiritual heights that they reached.

We have been gifted with free will to choose whom we want to copy as role models. If we spend our time with those with negative habits, then we will become so much like those people. We will be influenced by their negative ways and it will be harder for us to undo the bad habits we develop. If we are truly sincere about our progress in life let us find positive role models so that those virtues become a part of us. Then, we will find that we will not have to work to control our minds. So, let us find positive role models to emulate and become better persons.
