III. 24. Read the following passage and answer the questions set on it. 10x1=10

'Work is worship' is one of these precepts that have been embodied in every religion, culture and civilization of the world. Gandhiji observed 'God created man to work for his food and those who ate without work are thieves'. Work done by an individual produces output which benefits others in the society. It helps to fulfill the needs and purposes of life. A person who does the work feels happy and contented when his achievement brings appreciation and satisfaction for his quality of work. This provides greater incentive and interest to do further quality work.

Work is natural to man. It is work that adds meaning to life. Without it, life is dull, uninteresting and monotonous. Man is the crown of creation only because he is skilled and capable of doing hard work. His mind can guide him to choose the right work and guide it to its logical conclusion. Work rids us of three great evils : irksomeness, vice and poverty. An idle man is generally an unhappy person, while idle mind is devil's workshop.

Right from their childhood, children are taught to aspire high and attain high posts. At home and in school, they children are taught about various kinds of work and the respect and dignity of labour. This is the prime reason for all dissatisfaction and frustration among teenagers, when they fail to attain and accomplish their goals and when they are forced to work below their aspirations.

We should consider work as the prime basis of human life and the most dignified act in the life.

The true dignity of work is not in the type of work that one does but in the enthusiasm and interest one shows to do the work assigned.
