The shouts reached Harry, who was sleeping in a room on the top floor of his uncle's house. He sat up and looked around with wide-open eyes. Did he have a bad dream or did he really hear those shouts? He sniffed hard and smelt smoke – there really was a fire! There was no time to lose; he had to get out of the house immediately. He jumped out of the bed and opened the door. Smoke was everywhere. Harry ran without knowing where he was going, for he could not see clearly because of the thick smoke. But he saw flames all around him and the wooden floor was not under his bare feet.

Harry was frightened. He saw an open door and ran into the room. He was groping his way towards the floor so that he could jump out when he felt something soft. It looked like a bundle of clothes; Harry picked it up to protect his face from the smoke and the heat. Just then, the floor gave way and he fell to the floor below.

He saw the doorway in front and rushed out, with the bundle over his face. He found a huge crowd watching the house burn. A moment later, the bundle gave out a little cry. Harry nearly dropped the bundle in his surprise.

I found some grapes when an old man was sleeping. I took the juice in a large seashell and left it hidden under a small bush. A few days later, I tasted the juice and it had turned into wine. I took the seashell full of wine before the old man. I sipped it and exclaimed. "Ah! It's the sweetest wine I've ever tasted".

The wicked man signalled me to give him the remaining wine. He drank all the wine and was drunk senseless. Soon his hold on my back loosened and he set me free. I quickly picked up a heavy stone and struck the old man's head and he fell down dead.

Thus, I got rid of an evil man. I rushed to shore. I saw some sailors there. They had come ashore from their docked ship in search of some fruits. They saw me and asked who I was. I told them all I had gone through. Then one of them said, "Oh! You are lucky to be alive. The man was called the old man of the sea who killed all the people he met".
