What is drug abuse prevention? “Drug abuse prevention“ is a commonly used term, but what does it really mean? And what does it mean to schools? “Drug prevention“ or “drug abuse prevention“ has three main components: Demand reduction strategies These strategies aim to reduce the desire and willingness to obtain and use drugs and to prevent, reduce or delay the uptake of drug use. They may include abstinence-oriented strategies. Supply reduction strategies

These strategies aim to disrupt the production and supply of illicit drugs, as well as limit the access and availability of licit drugs in certain contexts. In the school setting this includes measures taken to limit the use, possession and sale of illicit drugs on school premises. Strategies to mitigate the negative health and social consequences of drug use These strategies aim to reduce the impact of drug use and drug-related activities on individuals and communities. The role of the school in drug abuse prevention It is possible, and desirable, for schools to be concerned with drug demand reduction, drug supply reduction and mitigating the health and social consequences of drug use, with the major focus on demand reduction. However, education authorities should not accept sole responsibility for changing student health behaviours, including reducing drug use. Schools may well be able to influence drug use behaviour and it is hoped that they will do so. However, it is the primary role of the school to teach skills, to impart knowledge and to establish a sound values base in relation to health and drug use, not to change behaviours that may be determined by factors beyond the influence of the school.Schools, therefore, should not make change in health behaviours of students, particularly drug use behaviours, the only measure of the success or effectiveness of drug prevention programmes. Schools can and should report to the community on the achievement of educational outcomes that have been identified as contributing to the achievement of the broader health goals of preventing drug use and reducing adverse consequences to individuals and society.
