Q. 1 The highest mountain peak in the world is in the Himalayas. It is Mount Everest. For hundred of years, nobody succeeded in reaching the Summit. Many people thought it would be impossible to measure or climb Mount Everest. The British, who ruled India until after the Second World war, established an office in the 1800's to survey the mountain and measure it. The man who had the idea to start the office was George Everest and he also wanted to measure all the other mountains in the Himalayas. After much work, the task was completed in 1852. The height was finally calculated as 8,840 (later established more precisely as 8882 meters). The mountain was named after Everest in 1863. Another century passed before the peak of Everest was finally reach. In 1953, Edmund Hillary, a New Zealander, and Sherpa Tenzing, a skilled mountaineer of India, climbed to the Summit.
