Economic liberalization and globalization have put pressures on Indian industry, particularly on the service sector, to offer quality products and services at low costs and with high speed.
Organizations have to compete with unequal partners from abroad. It is well recognized that developing countries like India are already behind other countries technologically, in many areas, although some of them particularly India, boast of huge scientific and technical manpower. In addition to this, if an entrepreneur or industrialist has to spend a lot of his time, money and energy in dealing with unpredictable services and in negotiating with the local bureaucracy, it can have a significant dampening effect on business.

Q.46. No other developing country except India claims that they have highly trained technical manpower.

Q.47. Foreign companies are more equipped than domestic companies to provide quality service in good time.

Q.48. Official formalities are less cumbersome in almost all the countries except India.

Q.49. Indian service industry wasmore comfortable before economic liberalization.

Q.50. India at present is to some extent on par with developed countries in terms of technological development.

Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below it. Certain words/phrases are given in bold to help you to locate them while answering some of the questions.

Aviation is an essential link for travel, trade and connectivity. While full service carriers attract passengers with the overall quality of their services, low cost airlines compete on cost. Theyoffer bare-bone services, flymore sectors a day and operate from smaller secondary airports that have lower charges. These may be very far from the city centres costing passengers more time and money to get into town. Some services like London's Luton are aimed at eliminating the problems of connecting flights. They tend to avoid head on competition with each other and prey on full services. Airlines Staff are usually less well paid, more intensively used and in shorter supply as compared to full service airlines. There are numerous exceptions though in other countries. Easy jet operates from major airports and Jet Blue offers live programs for free.

In India 70% of the operating costs of low cost airlines are the same as that of full servicecarriers, leaving just 30% to juggle with to gain an overall advantage over full service carriers. Many of these costs like fuel are above global levels. Exorbitant State and Central government taxes and duties are themain culprits. Air Deccan envisons that their airline fares will match rail fares unattainable because of the economies of scale that the railways enjoy. Few secondary airports and fares falling faster than their costs have hurt low cost airlines to utilize non-metro airports at lower charges during off -peak hours while providing full services airlines peak hour slots but at higher rates could help. Low cost airlines can aid economic development and the current economic boom has been the right time to launch India's low cost revolution though in their efforts to achieve economies of scale and greater market share they have been reckless and have gone deep into the red. India has to await second-generation low cost airlines to deliver the goods.

Q.176. The primary purpose of low cost airlines is to—a)provide connectivity at low rates
b)enhance economic development
c)do away with the inconvenience of connecting flights
d)reduce congestion at crowded city airports
e)reduce the passenger pressure on the railways

Q.177. The author's view of Indian low cost airlines is that—— a)they are based on global models allowing them to compete with railways.
b)they benefit from certain exemptions on tax and duties
c)with only 70% of the operating cost being the same as full service airlines they have a major advantage d)they are loss-making enterprises as their efforts to expand have been hasty
e) None of these

Q.178. Which of the following is/are TRUE in the context of the passage?
